DECREED.

Into all lives some rain must fall,
Into all eyes some tear drops start,
Whether they fall as a gentle shower,
Or fall like fire from an aching heart.
Into all hearts some sorrow must creep,
Into all souls some doubting come,
Lashing the waves of Life's great deep
From dimpling waters to settling foam.

Over all paths some clouds must lower,
Under all feet some sharp thorns spring,
Tearing the flesh to bitter wounds,
Or entering the heart with their bitter sting.
Upon all brows rough winds must blow,
Over all shoulders a cross be laid,
Bowing the form in its lofty height
Down to the dust in the bitter pain.

Into all hands some duty thrust,
Unto all arms some burdens given,
Crushing the heart with its dreary weight,
Or lifting the soul from earth to heaven.
Into all hearts and homes and lives
God's dear sunlight comes streaming down,
Gilding the ruins of Life's great plain—
Weaving for all a golden crown.

The Bachelor's Will.

The sun of an August day was sending golden shafts through the interlacing foliage overshadowing a limpid trout stream.

A young man was kneeling beside it, pole in hand, ostensibly fishing; but the speckled denizens of the brook had but little cause for alarm. The cool brain and steady hand, so dangerous to peace under ordinary circumstances, were not really putting forth any effort against them.

It was a handsome young face turned in such evident eagerness toward the faintly defined foot-path leading through the woods to the sylvan spot. The features were almost too regular for masculine ideas of beauty; but the firm way the red lips were set together and the massive chin redeemed them from weakness.

He started to his feet as the crackling of dried leaves and twigs betrayed an approaching footstep. Another moment, and a breathless young creature was beside him, panting from her rapid approach.

"I began to think you were not coming, Dot, and that my holiday was to prove a failure."

"It was by the merest accident that I got away. Father hardly trusts me out of his sight. But he was called off on unexpected business, and I've run every step. I feel so guilty all the time—I can't do it unless things change."

"Dot," began Philip reproachfully.

"I know it is hard," continued the girl, "but I am as much the sufferer by it as you. Though, Phil," with a sudden intensity in her voice, "one thing I can do, I solemnly promise never to marry any one but him I love, and that is—you know whom."

"That is poor comfort, Dot. To know that the girl you would shed your heart's blood for cannot give you a kind word now and then to keep up your spirits! I shall half the time think you are forgetting me, and making up your mind to marry the man your father is so taken with."

"You are very different from the idea I have of you if you give way to any such feeling. Why, Phil, all the people in the world couldn't make me believe you false, if you had promised to be true. But I must go I just came to tell you—no matter what happens—that force could not drag me into the marriage with Oram Dinsmore, and to say good-bye until we can meet as we used to, with the full consent of father."

"That'll never be!" was the gloomy answer. "It's good-bye forever, I am sure. I wish that old cousin of yours had left his money to some one else. It has destroyed our happiness. Your father seemed to like me until that will made you an heiress, and Oram Dinsmore began coming to the house. Much as he might have been taken by your looks, he'd never bothered his head about you unless there had been a prospect of adding to his possessions. I know him of old, and he's as tight as the bark of a tree."

"Really, Philip, you are complimentary. So money is the sum of my attractions, is it?"

But there was no vexation in the eyes she turned upon his troubled face. Hers was a true, truthful nature, and she understood her lover's meaning, though she tried to speak lightly and playfully to prevent a painful parting scene. Tears were near her eyes, but she forced them back; she must be strong for both. She held out her hand.

"Good-bye, Philip. Don't be discouraged; all will come right yet."

Philip took the little hand in his brown palm and gazed longingly into the sweet young face. Then he said:

"Won't you give me one parting kiss, Dot?"

"Yes, Philip, kiss me here," touching a slender finger to one of her soft cheeks, "and from this time that place will be sacred from the touch of other lips until we meet again."

Philip kissed the cheek, which flushed redly at the touch of his lips. Dot was chary of permitting caresses, and though they had been fond of each other from their boy and girl days, Philip had never presumed to kiss her, unless when playing a game of forfeits in some of the merry gatherings which are sometimes given in country neighborhoods for the double purpose of drawing the young people together and helping the farmers to husk their corn, or get the rosy produce of orchards into festoons of neatly pared and quartered apples to dry, on the principle that many hands and nimble fingers make light and pleasant work.

The next moment he was following the lithe little figure with sad eyes until it had disappeared under the overhanging branches. He lacked Dot's faith in the kindness of the future. He could only anticipate a long separation, and perhaps estrangement; and it was with a heavy heart that he gathered up his fishing tackle and started for home. A distant relative of the Ingrahams had lately died, and had willed his property to his cousin, Dorothy Ingraham. During his lifetime he had never shown that he was aware of the existence of our little Dot, and it was a great surprise to her when the old gentleman's solicitor came from New York with the intelligence that he had made her his heiress. At first it was a great pleasure to the girl, and she built many pretty "castles in the air" about the way she would use her wealth, until a change came over the scene.

Mr. Ingraham, who had heretofore seemed well pleased to have his daughter in Philip Bertram's company, began to entertain higher views for her, and when young Mr. Dinsmore, son of the President of the village bank, began to drop in of an evening, with the evident intention of seeing Dot, though he asked for her father, poor Philip began to be treated coldly, and was at last forbidden the house.

Had Dot's mother been living, things would have been different, for her sterling good sense would have carried the day against her husband's sudden inflation of feeling caused by their good fortune. But since his wife's death Mr. Ingraham had no one to influence him, for he considered Dot a mere child, to be petted and governed as though she were five years of age, instead of a well-grown girl of eighteen, of more than ordinary capacity and good sense.

Affairs went on this way for several months. Mr. Dinsmore's calls grew more frequent, and a strong pressure was brought to bear on Dot to make her listen to his suit, which was now openly declared. She now tried to discourage him by treating him with marked coolness and indifference, but he would not take a repulse, and her life was growing to be an unhappy one, her father's conversation being almost principally upon the perfections of her suitor, whom at heart she cordially detested; though doing her best to treat him with courtesy.

Philip knew of his constant visits, and heard rumors of an engagement. He grew gloomy and morose, and when he chanced to meet Dot, would pass her in a way which made her poor little heart ache.

So things went on from bad to worse, until Dot would have been glad if her inheritance had been sunk in the sea. At last another actor appeared—a young girl who created quite a sensation in the quiet village. She was from a city in the far West, and was very pretty, and knew just what colors to choose for her toilet to set off the tints of her glowing brunette complexion.

Dot's heart felt like lead in her bosom, when one day she met the stranger walking jauntily by Philip's side. She was shortly afterwards introduced to her, and for a few moments a hateful spirit suggested that she would make herself disagreeable; but she resolutely put the temptation away from her and appeared her own natural, lovable self. She soon ceased to wonder at Philip's evident pleasure in Miss Belmont's society. She was so frank and cheerful, and sparkling in her conversation, that she was won from prejudice, and they grew to be friends.

It was not long before Kate Belmont knew the true state of Dot's feelings towards Oram Dinsmore, though Philip's name was as a sealed book between them. Dot loved him as dearly as ever, and the very intensity of her feelings for him made her strangely shy of mentioning him to even her dearest friend.

It was a great surprise when Kate said to her one day, half jestingly:

"How strange that you don't like Mr. Dinsmore better! I have taken a great fancy to him, but have studiously avoided being even pleasant to him, for rumors gave him to you, and thinking him your special property, I didn't want to play with edged tools. But if you don't love him, I shall adopt different tactics—for I think he is perfectly splendid!"

"What is meat to one is poison to another. How true those old adages are. I don't think he cares for me; he never looked at me before I became rich. I wish old Jared Ingraham had left his money to some one else."

"Jared Ingraham," said Kate, musingly. "Where have I heard that name? Oh! I know. I have the dearest old friend out West, and it's her love story which that name has brought to my mind. Something happened to separate them when they were both very young, and she left all her friends and settled in the West. But she always remained single, and to this day is true to the memory of her old love. By the by, her name is almost the same as yours, only it's Dorothy Ingraham instead of Dot."

"Why," said Dot, "my name is Dorothy. They only call me Dot for short."

"I wonder if you and Miss Ingraham are related to each other? I am quite sure that Jared Ingraham was her lover's name. If it was the same person, doesn't it seem strange that he should have left his money to a young chit like you, begging her ladyship's pardon, instead of his faithful old love?"

Dot's face was a study as Kate rattled on. It fairly shone.

"Kate," said she, "I see it all! I am an interloper. Isn't it nice? The will said, 'I give and bequeath to my dear cousin Dorothy Ingraham'—that's all I can remember verbatim, but that's enough All the law terms in the world wouldn't make it any different to me. We all thought it strange that he should have left it to me when he had never had paid me the slightest attention when he was alive; but the lawyer said that to his knowledge there was no other person of that name, so I must be the one. Give me your friend's address, and I will soon get to the bottom of the matter."

"I'll give it to you, of course, but first promise me not to say anything about it until you are sure."

"I will keep silent until you give me permission to speak," said Dot.

She wrote at once to the old lady, and in due time received a reply which confirmed her suspicions. So she immediately began to put things in train so that Miss Ingraham should receive her rights.

A month had hardly gone by when, much to Dot's amusement, Mr. Dinsmore called and requested a private interview with her. She had noticed his growing fondness for Miss Belmont's society and half suspected the denouement.

As she went into the room he rose to meet her, and for the first time Dot felt an emotion of sincere liking and respect enter her heart for him. Under the influence of genuine feeling he seemed a different person to the plausible, polished man of the world who had tried to palm off the semblance of love upon her during his unsatisfactory courtship.

"Miss Ingraham," he said, flushing as he spoke, "I have come to make a confession and ask your forgiveness. Not for withdrawing my suit, for I know you have never even liked, much less loved, the unworthy man who stands before you; but for persecuting you with my unwelcome attentions. Under the light which a genuine passion has shed upon my actions I see how contemptible they have been, and I wish to apologize to you and make my peace before I dare speak to the young lady I love of my desires to win her for my wife. Will you forgive me!"

Dot held out her hand. "With all my heart, Mr. Dinsmore, and I shall always respect you for the frank, manly part you have acted at the last. You have my best wishes for your success."

Mr. Ingraham was at first very angry at Oram Dinsmore's defection, but when Dot said decidedly: "I would not have married him if I remained single all my life," he determined to give up trying to direct the course of true love, making a virtue of necessity, yet thinking himself a model father.

Dot was willing that her father should please himself with this delusion as long as he withdrew his opposition to Philip's coming to the house.

When a few months after the real heiress, Miss Dorothy Ingraham, appeared upon the scene, uncharitable persons said that Mr. Dinsmore had known of her mistake.

But Kate Belmont, his betrothed wife, had the pleasant consciousness that she had won his heretofore mercenary heart while he thought Dot the true heiress, and that he valued one glance of her bright eyes more than he did Dot's supposed thousands.

The real testatrix was very much taken with her namesake, and would not consent to take more than half the property. The mistake about her legacy had been the means of drawing her into the society of a young relative of whose existence she would otherwise have been ignorant. It proved very pleasant to her to have such a treasure trove of warm human affection bestowed upon her, for young Dorothy loved her aged cousin very dearly, and was always pleased to entertain her in her pretty home, for she became the wife of Philip Bertram, and the happiest little matron under the sun.

A Murderer's Toe.

Haynes, the Rockland (Me.) murderer, has recently made a toy house after the French style. It is about four feet high, by two deep and four long is as nicely built as the best mansion, with slate roof and fancy chimneys, has two stories, the lower one being devoted to a kitchen and a dining hall, the upper story to a drawing room and best chamber. The floor of the dining hall is inlaid with cherry and mahogany, one thousand and twenty pieces of wood being used in laying it; the kitchen is also inlaid, but less expensively. The furnishings are somewhat regal for a small personage. They consist of the usual kitchen paraphernalia, including hard wood tables with drawers in them roller for long towel, dishes, even to an old lady with specs, who eyes the visitor conspicuously. In the dinning room or hall a large chandelier pends above a black walnut table on which rests a handsome tettatee sett, made of wood, painted blue. A sideboard stands at the back of the room—merely as an ornament. The sets in the drawing room and chamber are perfect marvels of mechanical skill and Yankee ingenuity. The floors are tastefully carpeted. A marble fireplace is in the drawing room, and in a rack at its side stand the shovel and tongs all already to "poke up the fire" which merrily burns behind the grate. The chairs are as nicely made and upholstered as though they had been intended for the president of the United States. The walls and windows of the room are well adorned, and the house as a whole is a complete gem.

A Peculiar Fashion and Its Cause.

Many years ago the village of Shelford, near Nottingham, England, was distinguished by a very peculiar fashion in dress affected by most of men. This consisted in the wearing of coats with red velvet collars, and for a long time no explanation of it was forthcoming. Eventually, however, the mystery was solved through the vicar of the parish. It appeared that the village tailor was also the sexton, and that the velvet with which he adorned his customers' coats had been appropriated by him without license from the burial vaults of the Earls of Chesterfield, to which he had access by virtue of his office. The vicar communicated to the Earl a discovery which had filled him with horror, but that nobleman not merely forgave the offense, but actually commended the tradesman for making a good use of that which he and his ancestors had consigned to corruption and decay. Probably the Earl who approved the tailor's action was the famous "letters lord" who was the first prominent man in England to give a blow to undertakerdom. "Sated with the pompous follies of this world of which I have had an uncommon share, I desire no funeral honors," wrote the man who has been stigmatized "a high priest of the world's vanities;" and he proceeds to limit the expenses to be incurred at his obsequies to $500.

The Winter Drama.

The heroic prevails in the drama of the West, even among the amateurs, and what is lost in style is made up in action. The kitchen of the Bon Ton Lodging-house in Bodie, Colorado, recently witnessed an amateur performance of thrilling interest. There was a critical audience present when the curtain, a horse-blanket, was drawn aside. The piece was Deadwood Bill; or, The Roaring Waterspout of the Rocky Mountains," and it opened with a bloody fight between Bill and Pete Dickson, the terror from Tar Flat, for the possession of a lovely maiden, who was seated in a stage-coach, personated by a dry goods box. The fight was long and desperate, and brought into play all the knives and pistols the actors could borrow. Of course Bill whipped. There were nine murders in the first act, and in the second four stages were robbed and a band of Indians routed. The piece was a great success.

What He Did With the Soda.

A little washing soda was wanted for cleaning purposes, so George was given a dime and dispatched to the apothecary's at the corner to get it. George soon returns, but no soda.

"Why didn't you get the soda, George?" chorused the family.

"I did."

"Where is it, then?"

"Drank it."

"Yes; the man said it wouldn't keep to bring home."

A new light dawns on the family's mind. It asks eagerly:

"What did you ask for?"

"Soda."

"Did you say washing soda?"

"Washing soda? No; only soda."

Family laughs as though it were crazy. George doesn't know what all the fun's about, but he is subsequently heard to say:

"That was a boss drink!"

A Champion Liar.

Young Gluckerson met old Judge Van Snyder on the ferry boat at San Francisco, the other day, and, after shaking hands respectfully with that venerable friend of the family, said, casually:

"Did you hear of that terrible accident up at Botts' the other night?"

"Accident! Why, my dear young friend, no. Nothing serious, I hope?" said the Judge, much interested.

"Well, I'll tell you how it was," said Gluckerson, in a mournful voice. "You see, the old doctor was out until about 2 o'clock in the morning attending some patients, and, supposing he would be hungry when he came in, Mrs. Potts put a large pan of mush and milk—the old doctor's favorite dish, you know—under the stove to keep warm for him."

"Yes! yes!" said the Judge eagerly, as Gluckerson stopped to light a cigar. "Go on—what then?"

"Well, the doctor came in after a while, and went groping round in the dark for his mush—couldn't find a match, you know—and, as luck would have it, he picked up instead a pan containing bread, put there to raise over night. He was too tired to notice the difference—besides, he had taken two or three nips as he drove round—and so he actually ate up all the dough!"

"Gracious!" said the Judge.

"It's a fact, though. Well, towards morning the doctor began to swell, and swell—the yeast was getting its work in, you know—and pretty soon the whole family was up and rushing around half distracted. The doctor kept on groaning and shrieking and swelling, until he looked like a Saratoga trunk. At last they found out what he had done, and the whole family piled right on top of him, and sat there while they sent for a cooper."

"A cooper?"

"Yes; you see, they saw at once that unless something was done the doctor would burst before morning. So the cooper started in and put nine of those big half-inch beer keg hoops around his stomach. Of course that stopped his swelling, and by keeping a tin tube down his throat for the gas to escape, he just managed to pull through."

"Oh! the doctor pulled through did he?"

"Oh! yes; he's all right now excepting—"

"Excuse me," said the Judge grimly as he took out his notebook, "but will you favor me with your middle name in full. They are getting up a medal for the champion liar in the State, by order of the Governor, and I think I'll send in your—"

But the boat had landed, and the promising young candidate had melted away into the crowd.

A Monstrous Seawee

Of all marine algæ, the Nereocystis is most wonderful. Its stem occasionally attains a length of three hundred feet, though it is extremely slender even at the top, where it is surmounted by an enormous floating bladder six or seven feet long, which affords a favorite resting place to the sea otter. The account, indeed, is apparently so fabulous as given by Mertens in an interesting paper on the botany of the Russian possessions in America, that it could not be believed did it not depend upon unquestionable authority. The filiform stem (which is about as thick as a pack thread) when two or three feet long, swells suddenly above into a globose bladder. From the top of this springs a tuft of germinate leaves, mostly rising on five petioles. These leaves are lanceolate and membranaceous, from one to two feet long, and two inches broad in the center. As the plant grows older, the stem increases enormously in length, but only slightly in thickness. The globose bladder swells into a turnip-shaped or retort-like cylinder, six feet long and four feet six inches or more in diameter, in the widest part, the lower extremity gradually passing into the stem. The leaves, which at first were marked with a few faint nerves, split in the direction of the latter, cover a large space by their entangled mass, and attain a length of twenty-seven feet or more. Where the plant grows in any quantity, the surface of the sea becomes impossible to boats, in consequence of the dense floating masses of vegetation. The stem is employed for fishing lines when dry, and the large cylinder is used as a siphon for draining water out of boats, in the same way that another seaweed—the Ecklonia buccinalis—is used frequently at the Cape.

Burglars About.

Of late several burglaries have been committed in the neighborhood in which Mr. James Simpson lives, and, of course, the folks are not a little alarmed. In Simpson's row alone enough fire-arms and ammunition have been collected to conduct a very fair-sized war with Mexico, and Simpson, particularly, has bought a whole army of weapons and loaded them to the muzzle. Simpson's brother-in-law, George Washington Budd, commonly known as "Wash," lives with him, and for weeks past Wash, upon going to bed, has made such a preparation and display of various kinds of engines of destruction that a looker-on might have concluded that his purpose was to conduct a kind of battle of Gettysburg on his own responsibility.

The other night Wash, after recapping all his revolvers, running his thumb along the edge of his broadsword, half-cocking his gun, and laying his bowie knife on the chair, thought he heard a burglar prowling about down stairs. Buckling on his artillery, Wash, in his stocking feet, crept down the back staircase, determined to annihilate the thief.

Simpson heard the noise at the same moment, and he, thinking Wash was in bed asleep loaded up his machinery of death and crept softly down the stairs also without his boots.

Both reached the floor at the same moment. They stopped and listened. Wash thought he heard the burglar in the parlor. Simpson felt sure the rascal was in the dining-room pocketing the spoons. So while Wash trod noiselessly frontwards Simpson stepped stealthily to the rear. Midway in the hall they came into collision. Each felt perfectly certain that the other was the burglar.

Wash grappled with his antagonist instantly. Simpson knew that a death struggle had begun, so he took hold with all his might. Neither had a chance to draw his weapons

Wash strove to throw his burglar down, and Simpson, perceiving the game, made a huge effort to prostrate Wash. They pushed and pulled, and jerked, and shoved, and panted, bumping up against the wall, kicking up the carpet, and making such a hubbub that Mrs. Simpson, up stairs in her room, and afraid to come out, lifted up her voice and screamed with awful vehemence.

After a fearful and desperate struggle, during which Wash had his coat torn to rags and a couple of handsful of hair pulled out, and Simpson had his nose jammed against a chair until it felt as if it had swelled to the size of a watermelon, Wash let go a moment to get his breath. Thereupon Simpson made a rush for the front stairs quietly, in the dark, and Wash pretty well scared and tired of war, dashed off up the stairs, resolved to go and see why Simpson didn't come down and help him wipe the burglar out.

As Simpson got to the landing he saw Wash's form, by the dim light from the bathroom, in the back entry.

"Who's that?" shouted Simpson, nervously, feeling for his revolver.

"Me—Wash," replied his brother-in-law.

Simpson went to him and said—

"Thunder and lighting, Wash! Why didn't you come down sooner?"

"Sooner! Why, where've you been? I've had the most awful time you ever heard of."

"So've I," replied Simpson. "There's a burglar in the house, and I've been tearing him to pieces?"

"You don't say so? Why, my garcious, I've had a fight with one, too, and I think I laid him out!"

"You did? where?"

"Why, down stairs, there, in the front entry."

"Not in the entry, you don't mean?"

"Yes," said Wash, "in the entry; nearly banged the head off of him. Where was your man?"

"Why, in the entry, too. Queer I didn't hear you!

"Its is queer," replied Wash, "because I hammered his nose against a chair until it must be mashed flat.

"Whose nose?"

"The burglar's; and he tore my coat to rags, and pretty nearly scalped me."

"Who did?"

"The burglar."

Simpson was silent a minute, and then he said—

"Come in here to the light."

They entered the bathroom, and Wash looked at Simpson, and Simpson looked at Wash.

"Wash!" said Simpson.

"What?" said Wash.

"Wash, you're the biggest idiot in the State. Hang me if I don't believe you've been fighting with me! Look at my nose?"

"No! you don't say? Did you pull out your burglar's hair, and splinter up his coat?"

"I'm afraid I did," said Simpson.

"Mr. Simpson," said Wash, calmly, "if there is a bigger ass on the continent than I am, I think I can lay my hand on the man; a party by the name of Jim Simpson."

Just at this juncture Mrs. Simpson flew from her room, down the hallway, and into the bathroom, where she fell on her knees, clasped her hands, and shrieked—

"Save me, James! oh, save me! Washington, save me! Don't let me be murdered! Don't! oh, don't!"

Simpson looked sheepishly at Wash; then, without saying a word, he seized Mrs. Simpson by the arm, ran her over to her bedroom, and slammed the door. Then George Washington Budd went sadly up stairs, disgorged his murderous apparatus, locked his bowie knife in his trunk, and went to bed.

Both combatants swore secrecy; but Simpson couldn't help telling his wife, and she spread it, of course, and so here it is.

Richer Than Crœsus.

The ancient historians have a great deal to say about the wealth of various old Greeks and Romans; but none of them were so rich, in all probability, as are many living Americans. Crœsus, king of Lydia, 500 years before the Christian era, had so much gold, with other kind of property, that "rich as Crœsus" has been a threadbare simile. He was the great plutocrat of antiquity, and it is difficult to judge of the value of his possessions; but it is not likely that it ever reached more than $100,00,000 to $12,000,000 of our money. There are, no doubt, forty New Yorkers at least worth more than he, and some six or seven may have four-fold his wealth. The richest Roman in Julius Cæsar's time, and one of the triumvirate, was Marcus Lucinius Crassus, an astute speculator, noted for avarice. His fortune has often been estimated, and never above $9,000,000 to $10,000,000 in United States currency. An Athenian or Roman who could count his estate at what would be 1,000,000 of our dollars was considered immensely wealthy, but residents of our large cities who have no more than $1,000,000 are not now considered particularly well off, and are unknown among the opulent members of the community. Mere millionaires are so common as to merit little distinction financially. There was no such estate in ancient times as those of the Astors and Vanderbilts, and no such private fortunes as are held in Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, San Francisco, and other cities of the republic The growth of wealth has been prodigious in this country within this generation. Some of the largest accumulations in the land have been made within forty or fifty years. Half a century ago only one man in New York was worth $1,000,000, and his name was John Jacob Astor. Now hundreds of its citizens can go beyond those figures, and they feel rather poor than otherwise. When Stephen Girard died, in 1831, he was considered by all odds the richest man on this continent. Nobody approached or began to approach him monetarily, and yet his property was not valued at more than $9,000,000. Men who do not regard themselves as very old can easily remember when $100,000 was thought to be a fortune, even in our largest cities, and when $10,000 in the small towns was deemed an independence. At present $100,000 is hardly reckoned sufficient to make a man comfortable, and $10,000 would not be deserving of mention, unless in some rural village, where general poverty lends a magnifying power to any eye that contemplates any kind of coin. Within the next fifty years it is likely that great fortunes will be increased beyond what they have been in the same period in the past. In 1930 and 1940 it is probable enough that we shall hear of plain American citizens who are worth from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000, and who will be grumbling that they have no more.

Tricks on an Amateur Bartender.

The Hon. Hugh Carlin, of Lyon county, was in Virginia City last week. He is naturally good-natured and unsuspecting, but, don't presume too far, or he will be sure to drop on your little game. Some time ago Hugh was in Eureka. Not having anything to do when he first arrived in town, he wore away a good deal of time at a saloon kept by an old acquaintance, whom he happened to find there.

One morning this friend had some business out of town and got Hugh to take charge of the bar during his absence. Hugh laid aside his hat and took up his position. Some person who was in the saloon when Hugh thus took command went out among the boss jokers of the town. In pursuance of a plan agreed upon the first customer that arrived said, as he marched up to the bar, "Got any real first rate whisky?"

"Have I got any good whiskey? Haven't I? You don't find anything else passed over this bar. Never was a finer package of whiskey lugged into Eureka than what is on tap back in the store room!"

The man poured out a big horn, took a light swallow of it and began coughing. He coughed so hard that he was obliged to set down his glass. He then clapped both hands on his stomach and coughed himself all about the room—coughed his hat off and coughed until he was almost black in the face—coughed till the tears streamed down his cheeks—till he seemed not to have breath left to cough more, or to utter a syllable, when he took his handkerchief from his eyes, shook his fist at the astonished deputy barkeeper and rushed out of the saloon without a word, leaving his glass of liquor standing on the counter.

Hugh was frightened and bewildered. He took the whiskey bottle, held it up to the light and carefully examined it, fearing he had made some mistake. Finally, to make sure, he tasted it, and found it to be whisky, and pretty fair whisky, too.

He had but little more than recovered his usual serenity of mind when a gentleman came in and said:—"Have you got any good brandy—real, genuine brandy—no manufactured stuff?"

"What do you take us for?" cried Hugh. "There's not a drop of doctored liquor of any kind about this establishment. No such brandy as this was ever before brought to Eureka. It cost $22 a gallon in San Francisco. It's like oil!"

The customer poured out a liberal allowance, but had no sooner attempted to swallow it than he began coughing and spat out what he had taken into his mouth. He held both hands to his cheeks and whirled around on one heel like a dancing Dervish, then ran for the water pitcher and finally began coughing as though he would cough up his lungs.

"Ough, o-ough—hooh! hough!" coughed he. "Call that brandy?" and, doubled up like a half open jack-knife, he coughed himself out of the saloon.

Again was Hugh astounded, and again he critically inspected the liquor he had dealt out. He was finally convinced that it was all right, but that the fault was in the people—something wrong with them.

About the time that he had arrived at this conclusion a man came in, and spreading himself out before the bar to good advantage, said, "Have you got a good article of gin—real good, pure gin!"

"Of course we have—never keep anything else. What do you take us for?" and Hugh reached down the gin bottle from a shelf behind him with his left hand, while with his right he brought up from under the bar a cocked revolver, which he pointed at the head of the customer, as he placed the bottle before him; saying, "Now, you cough!"

That customer didn't cough.

I Can and I Will

How many boys there are who can, but never do, because they have no will-power or, if they have, do not use it! Before undertaking to perform any task, you must carefully consider whether you can do it, and, once convinced that you are able to accomplish it, then say, "I will do it," with a determination that you will never give up till it is done, and you will be successful.

The difference between "Give up" and "I can't" and "I can and will" is just the difference between victory and defeat in all the great conflicts of life.

Boys adopt for your motto "If I can I will," and victory will be yours in all life's battles.

"I can and I will" nerves the arms of the world's heroes to-day, in whatever department of labor they are engaged. "I can and I will" has fought and won all the great battles of life and of the world.

But I must not forget my schoolboy. He was prepairing to enter the junior class of the New York University. He was studying trigonometry, and I gave him three examples for his next lesson. The following day he came into my room to demonstrate his problems. Two of them he understood, but the third—a very difficult one—he had not performed. I said to him:

"Shall I help you?"

He replied, mildly, but firmly:

"No, sir! I can and will do it, if you will give me time."

I said: "I will give you all the time you wish."

The next day he came into my room, to recite another lesson in the same study.

"Well, Simon" (this by-the-way, was not his name), "have you worked that example?"

"No, sir!" he answered; "but I can and will do it, if you will give me a little more time."

"Certainly you shall have all the time you desire."

I always like these boys who are determined to do their own work, for they make our best scholars, and men, too. The third morning, you should have seen Simon enter my room. I knew he had it, for his whole face told the story of his success. Yes, he had it, notwithstanding it had cost him many hours of the severest mental labor. Not only had he solved the problem, but, what was of infinitely greater importance to him, he had begun to develop mathematical powers which, under the inspiration of "I can and I will," he has continued to cultivate, until to-day he is professor of mathematics in one of our largest colleges, and one of the ablest mathematicians of his years in our country.

My young friends, let your motto ever be: "If I can, I will."

HE had one son hanged, another son in the penitentiary, and his wife eloped with a chromo peddler. "Have you any family?" he was asked by a fellow passenger. "None to speak of," was the prompt response to the census man.

ENTHUSIASM FOR HANCOCK.

The Democrats Hearing Reports from Ohio, Illinois, Indiana and Elsewhere.

Special Dispatch to THE TIMES.

NEW YORK, August 10.

To-day's session of the national Democratic executive committee was devoted mainly to receiving reports from members of the condition of the canvass in their States. Chairman Burnum gave a running account of his visit to Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. He said that in the light of the enthusiasm he found in Ohio for Hancock he could not see how the State could be so confidently claimed by the Republicans. The same was in a measure true of Illinois, although not so much so as in Ohio. Altogether, the prospect was bright enough to gladden the heart of any Democrat. There was great cause for rejoicing at the choice of the Cincinnati ticket. Mr. Gentley, of Illinois, said that the battle-ground in that State might prove as much a surprise to the Republicans as Waterloo to Napoleon. Mr. Austin H. Brown, of Indiana, said he had come to attend the meeting at great personal inconvenience, but he wanted it understood that there was no doubt as to the result in his State. Mr. Orestes Cleveland promised that New Jersey should roll up 15,000 majority for Hancock, and there was every probability that the Democrats would have the next United States Senator. A letter was read from J. M. Hanlon, who had been sent through Pennsylvania on a political mission, saying that he found wonderful strength for Hancock. Senator Jonas said Louisiana was sure for Hancock.

A letter was read from William H. English, the Vice Presidential candidate, in which he says: "The evidence of negro importation into Indiana increases every day." The committee thereupon decided to use the utmost efforts to prevent negro colonization. Detectives will be employed to watch the leaders in this colonization scheme and to arrest all violators of the election law. Mr. Armstrong reported for Ohio that the Democrats are united. The Republicans were not enthusiastic, especially in the Western Reserve. It was reported from New Hampshire that a Hancock club has been formed in every town. Favorable reports were received from Vermont and Maine, and the committee, at the close of a very long session, adjourned until to-morrow.

The Georgia Governorship Split.

ATLANTA, August 9.—The Democratic Convention has been in session five days without much hope of making nominations under the two-thirds rule. The twenty-ninth ballot was unchanged, and the convention adjourned until to-morrow. The majority will not leave Governor Colquitt for any other man that can be named, as he has within twenty of a two-thirds vote of the convention. The matter will be referred to the people with a recommendation from the majority to elect Governor Colquitt in October All parties will unite upon the Electoral ticket and platform and candidates of the Cincinnati Convention will be endorced. The party will act in harmony with the National Democracy.

Washington Letter.

Washington, D. C. Aug. 4th 1880.

An unpatriotic Radical press refuses to be happy over a Southern increase population. That Texas, Missouri, North Carolina and Florida, by reason of exceptional advantages in climate, or of special inducements offered to emigrants, have gained in population one half as much as the Northern States, is a fact which the Radical Northerner is amazed and offended at. For thirty years the Northern papers—the anti-Southern portion of them—were saying that the South, with the best climate and soil in the world, was held back by slavery. That was true. Slavery prevented emigration of foreigners and of Northern men to the South. But slavery has been dead these many years, and the South is slowly but surely receiving the benefit of that death. In the next ten years, I expect to see a far larger increase of population in Virginia, North and South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Arkansas, Alabama, Louisiana, and Texas than in the past ten years. Kentucky, Tennessee, West Virginia, and Missouri, by wise state policy, can almost double their population in that time. All this ought to be cause for rejoicing to Northern men, and probably is to most of them. But its politicians, and the ultra radical newspapers see a chance for political capital, or think they see it, and are attacking the integrity of the Census returns which show an increditable increase in the States named. It is a very gratifying fact that General Walker, Superintendent of the Census, though a Republican, is not the kind of man to be bulldozed into a declaration that fraud exists where no fraud is shown. Such a declaration is what the politicians are after. They want it for election purposes. They want it before October, so as to effect the Ohio and Indiana elections. I know General Walker, and I don't believe he is the man to falsify history and facts for any party's advantage. If any enumerator here or there is found to have committed fraud, as one was in New York the other day, he will be punished, of course, but the General will not indict whole people because of political clamor.

Mr. Hayes returned here yesterday, and will remain a few days in active preparation for his reform trip to the Pacific Coast in the interest of General Garfield. There is probably no Northern State in which Mr. Hayes, or one or more of his Cabinet officers will not speak for the Republican Candidate. As the administration early announced that one of its prime objects was to seperate polttics from official business, this fact is worthy of note.

CARROLL.

The following able and well-digested article on the congressional situation in this district we copy from the Lewistown Free Press, and commend it to the candid consideration of the readers of the Journal:

The Congressional Question of 1878 Contrasted with 1880.

The campaign of 1878 was a phenomenal one in Pennsylvania politics. For the first time in many years a disturbing element entered into the contest which threatened destruction to the calculations of the most astute leaders in both the old parties. A third ticket was in the field for State, and, in most cases, for congressional, legislative and county officers. The strength of this third party was the unknown quantity which confused the judgement of old political managers and made them more than anxious to propitiate as far as possible those of their own household who had gathered under the new banner. Under the lead of mistaken men the campaign became a crusade against property, the obligations of the government and particularly the National Banks. It was the misfortune of ex-Gov. Curtin to be a candidate for congress at this juncture in a district in which the feeling against men of wealth was lashed into white heat. From every portion of his district was heard the most virtulent denunciation of those who were financially interested in National Banks, or who were holders of the bonds of our government. It was a time when men's reason was overthrown and their passions cunningly played upon. Governor Curtin was a stock holder in a National Bank, a man of large means, and therefore the legitimate prey of those who were clamorous for nothing more or less than the annihilation of all who were even remotely connected with institutions which they hated so cordially. The magnificent services of Governor Curtin to his State and country; his matchless devotion and patriotic self sacrifice in the dark hours of civil war; the unfaded lustre he shed upon the great commonwealth whose chief executive he was, inboring day and night to equip her brave sons as they flocked around him at his call ready to do battle for their country's honor, all these things were forgotten in 1878, and Governor Curtin's connection with a National Bank was sufficient to efface a past that is glorious with noble deeds.

Looking back dispassionately at the surroundings of the congressional campaign of 1878, the passions evoked and aroused, the prejudices appealed to and all the influence at work, it will be conceded that Gov. Curtin had much to contend with. And yet with all this weight to carry he received the suffrages of 13,381 voters in the district, only 500 less than the Democratic candidate for Supreme Judge received at the same election, and only 634 below the Democratic vote cast for Lieut. Governor, which is perhaps the fairest test of party strength at that time in the counties composing the 20th congressional district. Mr. Dill's vote was 14,245, only 864 in excess of that cast for Gov. Curtin, in a district in which they both resided, and who could truthfully plead not guilty to the charge of being a bond holder, then held to be the unpardonable sin by the new factor in politics.

How different will be the canvass of 1880! With Winfield Scott Hancock as the Democratic candidate for President, it seems most appropriate that Andrew G. Curtin should accompany him on the ticket for congress in the 20th district. Every plea made for Hancock applies with equal force to Curtin. While Hancock was striking heavy blows against armed rebellion on the battlefields of the Union, Curtin, the illustrious war Governor, was nerving his arm and lending strength to his blows. The issues of 1878 are laid at rest, and now in this year of grace the great question of national unity and reconciliation, honesty and economy in administration, and the purification of the civil service are the pregnant issues of the contest of 1880. These are the questions of the hour, and with Hancock as the Democratic leader there can be no more fitting nomination made than that of Andrew G. Curtin for congress.

The recollections of the past in which Hancock and Curtin both bore such conspicuous parts, will make the success of one the triumph of the other. Appeals to soldiers to rally to the support of Hancock would come with a bad grace from men who had taken part in the slaughter of Pennsylvania's great War Governor. The hollowness and hypocrisy of such appeals especially to Republican soldiers, would be apparent after striking down the "soldiers' friend," the projector of the magnificent charity which provided comfortable homes for the children of the dead heroes of the war. We commend these reflections to the deliberate judgement of the people of the 20th district and particularly to the real friends of General Hancock throughout the state.

UNION.

HON. DAVID DAVIS, of Illinois, is one of the most prominent representatives of the independent political sentiment of the country that arbitrates between parties and determines the result of important elections. In a letter just published Senator Davis declares for General Hancock and puts especial stress upon the necessity for a change of parties in the government. One of the greatest dangers to republican institutions arises from the patronage by which the dominant party seeks to perpetuate its hold of power. A bureau is established at Washington whose secretary openly demands contributions from the officials of the government because of their "dread" of the restoration of the democrats to control of the government. The doctrine proclaimed by Flanagan at Chicago, the securing of the offices and spoils, is thus acknowledged to be the highest motive of the republican party.

Senator Davis regards the election of General Hancock as one of the utmost importance in putting an end to sectional strife and arousing throughout the entire land a patriotic sentiment which the spirit of faction has done its utmost to smother. His earnest conviction is that there can be no permanent prosperity to the country until there is a genuine restoration of peace, and this opinion, which is shared by the independent voters of the country, will swell the majorities by which General Hancock will be called to the office of president.—Patriot.

The latest charge against Gen. Hancock was a Missouri lady before her marriage with the general and that their only son is a resident of Mississippi, all which it is feared may seriously affect his loyalty to the Union. O dear.

We hereby respectfully acknowledge the receipt from Speaker Randall a sett of bound volumes Congressional Globe, 3rd session 42nd Congress, containing the debate and speeches on the Credit Mobilier scandal.

Hon. S. P. WOLVERTON, of Sunbury, has been nominated for the state senate by the democrats of Snyder county. This will give him the district nomination.

—A terrible rail road accident occured last Wednesday, the 11th inst., at May's Landing, a small station on the West Jersey and Atlantic R. R. An excursion of 23 cars in two sections had left Atlantic city on its return trip to Philadelphia. The second section telescoped the first and a scene of indescribable excitement and confusion followed. James Sweeney was instantly killed and some forty to fifty others injured a number of whom have since died. Edward Aitken, the engineer, and C. M. Hoagland, the conductor of the second section of the train, are both under arrest charged with murder.

ASSEMBLY.

We are authorized to announce that B. F. HEYNES, of Benner township, is a candidate for Assembly, subject to the decision of the Democratic County Convention.

We are authorized to announce that CHESTER MUNSON, Esq., of Philipsburg, will be a candidate for the Legislature, subject to the decision of the Democratic County Convention.

—For good and cheap clothing go to Lewin's Philadelphia Branch Store Bellefonte, Pa. tf.

—The sale notes of the estate of Jonathan Philips, deceased, are now due, of which all concerned will please take notice. tf

—Harris, of the Standard Store, a Lewisburg, is now closing out his stock at greatly reduced prices preparatory to purchasing early fall goods. For bargains go to Harris.

—The old David Stover homestead above Millheim was recently sold to Mr. Wm Spees of Union county for $1800, which we consider a very fair price as times are.

PUBLIC SALES.—Sept. 11th, farm of 106 acres near Rebersburg, by S. Gramly and A. Smull, Executors of the estate of Henry Smull, deceased.

August 27th, 11 acres of land in Poe Valley, by J. H. Reifsnyder, administrator of Jacob Immel's estate.

—One thousand brick-layers and masons are at work in Milton and more are wanted. A limited number of able-bodied lawyers and doctor's, provided they are sober, industrious and fairly intelligent, can also find employment there at carrying brick and mortar.

—Over 400 "rigs" passed through town on Sunday to camp meeting, and it is thought that nearly as many more came from the lower end of the valley and Union county. At a fair estimate there must have been upwards of 2500 people on the ground.

—Just before going to press we received a letter from George A. Runk, Esq., of Spring Mills to the effect that a dispatch had been received from Col. Slifer of Lewisburg, stating that at least 25 car loads of people intended coming up to the Harvest Home Picnic, and that passengers from Coburn Station will be carried to the picnic at a reasonable fare.

—It is with much pleasure that we this week publish a very fine campaign song composed by our friend Carl Schreiber. Carl shows much good taste in suiting his beautiful song to the equally beautiful tune, "Die Wacht am Rhein." We hope and firmly believe, that the poets wishes and predictions of the song will be fully vertified.

—Charley Frankenberger offers his home, near town, at private sale. Any person desiring a property of this size would do well to look at this one for there is not a more complete property in this neighborhood.

The buildings are all new and very complete. Good water in abundance all the year round and choice fruit of every kind. tf.

—The upper end of Penns Valley had a terrible thunder storm the other Wednesday, 11th inst., during which the barn on Mr. Vantries' farm, on which commissioner Geo. Swab is the tenant was burned to the ground. The entire crop and all the farming utensils were consumed. The live stock was all saved with the exception of one calf. The barn was insured to the amount of $200. We have not learned whether Mr. Swab has any insurance or not.

—"We cannot but smile," says an exchange, "when a man tells us he cannot take his local paper because he wants a city paper. He might as well say he cannot afford bread because he intends having sponge cake. Meanwhile he has to ask his neighbor about the local news and notices, and the local paper goes on building up his place and business and conveniences without his support. It is not manly and we say without hesitation that there is something out of joint with a man who does not support his local paper."

PROLIFIC GRASS STALK.—Our friend Mr. John H. Musser, than whom there is no more intelligent and practical boxer in this section, undertook the other day to count the blades on a single stalk of orchard grass, but found it a bigger job than he had bargained for. The stalk had 1073 well developed blades of an average length of about 18 inches, and it is the second growth of the season. Any Garfield man that dares to beat that is requested to step three paces to the front so that all concerned may have a full view of him.

—Prof. P. M. Bickle, of Pennsylvania, College Gettysburg, gave us a hearty shake of his warm, genial hand, one day last week while attending the session of the Northern Conference here. The Prof. is off duty at College just now and has been rusticating in our delightful valleys for some weeks. He delivered an address on the educational interests of the church on Tuesday evening, which was a clear statement of the status of the Lutheran church on the question of higher education as well as a strong appeal for the support of our colleges and seminaries. The Prof. has made friends for the cause and for himself personally. Hope he will call again.

—The books and accounts of J. W. Stam are left in my hands for settlement and collection of which all concerned will please take notice.

3t T. R. STAM.

—The Northern Conference of the Central Pennsylvania Synod met pursuant to notice in the U. B. Church, Millheim, on Tuesday evening the 10th inst. The following ministers and lay delegates were present, the attendance being a very good one considering the busy season: Rev. J. G. Anspach, Mifflinburg, no delegate. Rev. Charles Schnure, Laurelton, Mr. John Smith, delegate. Rev. John Tomlinson, Aaronsburg, Mr. Thomas Frank, delegate. Rev. W. R. Wieand, Rebersburg, Mr. Jacob Brungard, delegate. Rev. Wm. H. Diven, Salona, Mr Peter Dornblaser, delegate. Rev. S. E. Furst, Bellefonte, no delegate. Rev. J. A. Koser, Pine Grove, no delegate. Rev. Jacob Yutzy, Boalsburg, George Kline delegate. Rev. J. K. Miller, Centre Hall, Rev. M. L. Furst, Salona, Prof. P. M. Bickle, of Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg.

Able and interesting sermons on special subjects were preached, on Tuesday evening by Rev. Wm H. Diven, Wednesday evening by Rev. J. A. Koser, and on Thursday evening by Rev. W. R. Wieand. An essay was read by W. R. Wieand on "What is it to bear one another's burdens;" by Rev. S. E. Furst on "Practical infidelity—how best arrested," and on "The duty of the Church in relation to intemperance" also by Rev. S. E. Furst. These essays were all followed by free and interesting discussions in which a majority of the members of conference engaged.

Thursday afternoon a childrens' meeting was held. Nearly all the children of the several sabbath schools in town were present, as well as a good audience besides. The church was filled. Revs. Schnure, Diven, Miller and Prof. Bickle addressed the children, and the general opinion was that the speeches were very "good"—pointed, practical and short. It was one of the best meetings of the kind we ever attended.

Altogether this session of the Northern Conference was a success throughout. The ministers, delegates and visitors were much pleased, the members of the congregation as well as the people generally were highly entertained and feel themselves benefitted for having had conference in their midst, and the cause of education and religion no doubt received a good impetus in Millheim. God speed the work.

HANCOCK CLUB SONG.

BY CARL SCHRIBER.

Air—"Die Wacht am Rhein."

1. From North and South, from East and West
   A voice that cannot be suppressed
   Comes like the murmur of the sea—
   Who will our country's leader be?

Chorus: Land of the Pine, let peace be thine!
Land of the Palm, rest thou in calm!
Land of the Palm and Pine,
be glad and free,
For Hancock shall your trusty leader be.

2. A thousand thousand hearts beat high;
   "Hurrah for Hancock!" is the cry;
   "He'll guide the good old ship of State
   And keep the Union strong and great."

3. He looks to heaven where ancestors
   Behold the hero tried in wars,
   And vows with patriotic pride
   "The Constitution is my guide.

4. "No North, no South, no East, no West
   Shall each by other be oppressed;
   The murmurs of the palm and pine
   In one grand anthem shall combine."

5. The vow resounds; from main to main
   Again shall truth and justice reign;
   Upheld shall be the people's cause,
   The Constitution and the laws.

UNCLE TOM.

NEWS FROM BRUSH.

Black-berries are plenty in eastern Brush Valley.

Mr. and Mrs. Jared Harper of Bellefonte are in town at present enjoying the hospitalities of friends.

Our select school is well patronized. Upwards of forty are in attendance. Students from many parts of Centre as well as from several places in Clinton are here.

The "superb" soldier is all right with us, and—Oh, excuse me for alluding to politics under the head of locals.

Mr. John Bressler is our champion snake killer so far. It was a black one and measured over six. [The writing is so indistinct just here that we can not say whether it is six inches, six feet or six yards, and so we leave the choice of size entirely to the reader. Ed.]

Of course we all attended camp-meeting on Sunday and enjoyed it very much. The crowd was very great and the inquiry arose with me just how many came for the purpose of worshiping God. I don't believe that one out of ten came for any such purpose.

Geo. S. Frank and L. H. Leitzell, will soon leave for Philadelphia, the former to attend lectures at Jefferson Medical College, the latter to attend at some Dental school. Both are estimable young men and we wish them much success.

Col. Henry Royer, who is over four score, lost the sight of one of his eyes. It was caused by a stubble being thrust into it some time ago. It has affected his general health so much that his friends doubted his recovery for a time, but he is recruiting and his family is again very hopeful. May he yet live long.

News Miscellany.

A Painter's Terrible Fall.

Special Dispatch to THE TIMES.

ALTONA, August 8.—A frighful accident occured here about half-past eight this morning. A man named James P. Wills, who was painting the spouting at the Globe Hotel, sixty feet from the ground, had jumped twice across the opening between the roofs of the two wings of the building, beneath which was a court. Not heeding the warnings of a fellow-workman on the third attempt to jump over his feet slipped and fell into the court below, his head striking the pavement. His skull was fractured and he died after a few convulsive gasps. He was a married man and was about thirty-four years old. His brother met an almost similar death by a fall from one of the Philadelphia Centennial buildings in 1876 while painting.

AGRICULTURE.

SUNFLOWERS.—We have lately met with a paragraph in several of our exchanges, recommending the planting of a sunflower seed in the middle of each hill of pole beans, so that the stalk of the sunflower, growing faster than the beans and always keeping a little ahead, would serve instead of a pole, saving to the grower considerable labor and expense. How this would work in practice we cannot say, but we do know that for many uses the sunflower is a valuable plant to raise. It grows very rapidly and when thickly planted around sink drains, privies, and other unsightly and offensive places, it not only serves as a screen, but it also is said to have the property of absorbing malarious exhalations and purifying the atmosphere. The seeds are much relished by poultry, and, if not fed too liberally, are very wholesome. A correspondent recommends the seeds as a cure for the heaves in horses, and says: A gentleman told me that there is nothing equal to sunflower-seeds for that purpose. He had one bushel of the seeds ground with two bushels of oats, and gave a horse two quarts of the mixed meal, wet in water three times a day. He took the time when the horse was not used to hard work. In two weeks not a sign of the heaves could be observed, and the horse looked as sleek and bright as if his hair had been oiled. He had cured two horses of his own of this distressing complaint, and recommended it to others who had experienced a like result. In cases of horse-distemper and coughs, it is an excellent remedy.

PERMITTING YOUNG FRUIT TREES TO BEAR EARLY.—It very frequently happens that young pear and other fruit trees blossom and, if permitted to do so, bear fruit the same season that they are planted. We have had the blossoms and fruit of such trees pointed out to us as evidence that the trees were thriving particularly well. Such evidence, however, is indicative rather of weakness. There is nothing more harmful to young trees than to permit them to bear fruit the year of transplantation. Even for dwarf pears, the third year is soon enough for them to bear, and the sixth year is soon enough for the generality of standards. Our readers will find that if they suffer young trees to mature fruit the first or second year, their vigor will, in most cases, be impaired forever after, and having borne at this early age, they will not, as a rule, bear again in five or six years afterward. The temptation to inexperienced fruit-growers to see their young trees in fruit as soon as may be, is considerable. It is because we yielded to such temptations, that we are now able to guard our readers against falling into the same error. Fruit-bearing is an exhausting process, and only trees that have arrived at a certain age or maturity can exercise the function without endangering their health and strength.

KEEP THE COWS CLEAN.—To keep milk clean while in the act of drawing it, the cow must be clean, her bag and teats washed and wiped before commencing to milk her, and the milkman's hands be then washed. After straining and setting see that no foul air can come from any quarter to taint the milk, and for this we must be particularly careful, for such is often borne on a strong breeze fully a mile off or more from the place where it orfginated. It is, of course, presupposed that all vessels used for holding the milk are kept clean and entirely clear of every sort of oders. We have often seen the dairy house placed close to the cattle yard, poultry house, and, what is foulest of all, a dirty pig pen. No wonder where this is the case so much butter and cheese are sent to market not fit to be eaten.

GRAPES.—In gathering choice clusters use the scissors which hold the bunch after it is cut, thus avoiding the touching of the berries, which remove the bloom and injures their appearance. Those to be packed in boxes should be placed in trays and keep in a cool place for a few days, until the skin toughens, when they are to be placed with great care, using three or five pound boxes. Pack by removing the bottom of the box.

PONDING WATER.—The practice of ponding water for stock is to be condemned. From its stagnant condition it necessarily become impure, especially during the hot season, and when drank is a serious injury to the health of the stock. It is one of the causes of bad odor in milk and not unfrequently the cause of malarial and typhoid diseases in a farmer's family. Provide fresh, living water for all stock if you would keep them healthy and thrifty.

THE FIELD ROLLER.—One of the most useful implements that can be used upon the farm is the field roller. It crushes the clods, levels and smoothes the ground, and presses the earth firmly around the seed; causing it to sprout and grow much earlier. In very dry weather a good rolling of the ground will often cause seeds to grow which otherwise would not have germinated.

Popular Ideas of the Cross.

In the west of England there is a tradition that the cross was formed of the mistletoe, which before that event used to be a fine forest tree, but has since been doomed to lead a parasitical existence. Gypsies believe that it was made of the ash tree. The nails used at the crucifiction, said to have been found by Helena, are reported to have worked many miracles. One of them was thrown by her into the Adriatic during a storm, and produced a perfect calm. Another place in the crown or helm of Constantine was found in a mutilate state in the Church of Santa Croce. The third is said to be in the possession of the Duemo of Milan, while that of Treves claims the fourth. In the time of Charlemagne a new relic was discovered in the shape of a sponge soaked in the blood of Christ. In Cheshire the Arum maculatum is called "Gethsemane" because it is said to have been growing at the foot of the cross, and to have received some drops of blood on its petals. The dirpe of Mamre died at the crucifixion! "Christ's thorn" is a very common plant in Palestine. In Scotland it was formerly believed that the dwarf birch is stunted in growth because the rods with which Christ was scourged were made from it. These are the popular ideas of the material of the cross, some of which will, perhaps, never be entirely obliterated until the last great day, when "all things shall be made plain."

DOMESTIC.

ICE.—What was done before ice came into use? In oriental countries the devices were few and simple. A low temperature was attained by the evaporation of water through porous jars, the bottles or other articles to be cooled being placed inside. The waters of deep wells were early sought for, and are to-day as much in demand as they were in the time of Christ. Aside from these there is but little comfort in tropical climates, where ice is yet unknown, and the pious Mussulman resigns himself to fate with much more philosophy than a Christian shows under the same circumstances. Here, even at the present day, in many parts of the country the customs of the forefathers are followed. Articles to be preserved are suspended half way down the wells, or cellars are dug deep enough, with the aid of thick stone walls, to defy the heat. When a mountain stream can be diverted to supply the house and dairy, ice can be dispensed with, but at the present time the large cities would be almost as panic-stricken and deserted should ice disappear as they would with a failure of water. It is the glory of summer: it is January pitted against July, an equilibrium established by the genius, labor and foresight of man.

QUAKER OMELET.—A Quaker omelet is a handsome and sure dish when care is taken in the preparation. Three eggs, half a cup of milk, one and a half tablespoonful of corn starch; one tablespoonful of butter; put the omelet pan and a cover that will fit close on to heat; beat the yolks of the eggs the corn starch and the salt very well together; beat the whites to a stiff froth, add to the well beaten yolks and corn starch; stir all together very thoroughly, then add the milk: now put the butter in the hot pan, and when melted pour in the mixture; cover and place on the stove where it will brown but not burn; cook about seven minutes; fold, on a hot dish, and serve with the cream sauce poured around it. If the yolks and corn starch are thoroughly beaten, and when the stiff whites are added they are well mixed, and the pan and cover are very hot, there can be no failure.

PINEAPPLE ICE CREAM.—Press the juice from a fine ripe pineapple; add that of a lemon, with syrup or pounded sugar to give the required sweetness; mix with an equal quantity of rich cream and strain into the freezing pot. Or, make a custard as follows: Boil a pint of milk, pour it while boiling on the yolks of six eggs; stir rapidly over the fire until it thickens, taking care not to curdle it. With a little experience a perfect custard may be thickened in this way in less than seven minutes, a much longer time being required if the milk is not boiled. When cold add pineapple pulp, made as follows: Boil a pound of pineapple, sliced and peeled, in a gill of water for ten minutes: pound the fruit and rub it through a sieve, and add syrup or sugar to taste. When cold mix with the custard and strain into the freezing pot. Lemon juice can be added if necessary.

DANGEROUS LIQUIDS.—Ammonia, especially the stronger kinds is dangerous, a few drops being enough to injure a person. When used for cleansing purposes it should be handled with great care, that the gas, which is given off freely in a warm room, be not breathed in large quantities, and do injury to the delicate lining of the nose and mouth. Benzine, is a liquid, in the handling of which much caution should be exercised. It is very volatile, and its vapor, as well as the liquid itself, inflammable. When employed for removing grease, or other stains, from clothing, gloves, etc., it should never be used at night, nor at any other time near a fire. Ether is another dangerous liquid, and in other than the physician's hands it had best not be employed in the household. Alcohol must also be used with great care, especially at night.

NUTRITION IN CHEESE.—Cheese of a good quality is richer in nutritive elements than any other known article of food. it is not itself very easy of digestion, although in moderate quantities it is known to help the digestion of other food. It contains in one pound of only a moderately good specimen 2,660 grains of carbon and 315 grains of nitrogen; if the free hydrogen be added to the former then 3,283 grains of carbon, but the large quantity of nitrogen is the test of nutriment. A pound of the best roast beef contains only 362 grains of nitrogen, and a pound of boiled beef only 215 grains. In dried bacon there are only seventy-nine grains of nitrogen to the pound.

ORANGE TART.—Grate the yellow of one orange, squeeze out the juice, being careful to avoid the seeds, the juice and yellow of half a lemon, fourth of a pound of sugar, two ounces butter, carefully melted, two eggs leaving out the whites of one; beat well; stir all together, line a tart-tin, or patty-pans with thin paste, fill and bake 15 or 20 minutes.

An attempt is being made to substitute paper for wood in Germany, in the manufacture of lead pencils. It is steeped in an adhesive liquid, and rolled round the core of lead to the required thickness. After drying, it is colored, and resembles an ordinary pencil.

$500 Reward—Catarrh Cure.

Some people would rather be humbugged than to get "value received" for their money. Hence it is that such persons run after this and that pretended cure for catarrh, forgetting that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is so positive in its effects, that its former proprietor advertised it for years throughout the United States under a positive guarantee, offering $500 reward to an incurable case and was never called upon to pay this reward except in two cases. This remedy has acquired such a fame that a branch office has been established in London, England, to supply the foreign demand for it. Sold by druggists at 50 cents.

UNABLE TO BREATHE THROUGH NOSE.

PORTLANDVILLE IOWA,
March 11th 1879.

Dr. R. V. PIERCE:

Dear Sir—Some time ago I bought a Douche, some of your Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and Golden Medical Discovery and commenced to use them. The aches and pains as well as sore throat and catarrh from which I have been for so long a time a sufferer, have entirely left me with their use. I feel like a new man as well as look like one. For four years I was unable to breathe through my nose. From the use of the Catarrh Remedy I can do so now freely. Your medicines I know to be all that they are represented. Long live Dr. Pierce and the gentlemen connected with him.

Gratefully yours, WATSON SMITH.

WIT AND HUMOR.

"WITH the annual concurrence of Decoration Day," remarked Mrs. Goodington at breakfast this morning, "my mind goes back to the times of the torbilion. How well I remember my first visit to the tainted field! How pneumatic it all appeared, just like some of the scenes predicted in "Thaddeus of Warsaw." The lines of snowy canvas, the troops marching about with their bayonets blistering in the sunshine, and the officers riding lugaciously hither and yon. It made Daniel all worked up. I remember how he straightened up and wished he was young enough to join the ranks of his country's defenses. Daniel had a very compulsive nature." And the old lady, as usual, entirely forgot Decoration Day and the soldiers in contemplation of the dear departed. Her tea-cup was held nervelessly in one hand, and the bit of bread in the other remained untasted. She did not notice, even, that Tommy had torn a strip off her brown-new apron for a military sash.

Prejudice Kills.

Eleven years our daughter suffered on a bed of misery under the care of several of the best (and some of the worst) physicians, who gave her disease various names but no relief, and now she is restored to us in good health by as simple a remedy as Hop Bitters, that we had pooh-ed at for two years, before using it. We earnestly hope and pray that no one else will let their sick suffer as we did, on account of prejudice against so good a medicine as Hop Bitters."—Telegram.

"DO I think of you?" you ask, dearest," wrote a husband to his wife. "Do I think of you? Yes, I do; especially when a button comes off or I find a hole in my stocking." "I am glad you think of me darling," she wrote in reply; "I used to think a great deal of you when I wanted to go to the concert or the theatre, or when I felt like having a drive; but since I found a gentleman friend who was willing to take your place I have not been troubled so much." He took the next train home, nursing a volcano of wrath in his bosom the whole distance. It is needless to say that the conflict was a short one; a man couldn't stay angry long in the presence of her sparkling eyes and merry laughter. But he felt that she had served him right, and his future letters will doubtless show more appreciation of wifely attributes.

AN Ohio man while taking a drink of whisky swallowed a large blue-tail fly, and at last accounts his recovery was considered doubtful. Even blue-tail flies, it would appear, were created for a wise purpose—though it is not certain whether it was the insect or whisky that brought the man to death's door. It is probable that if he had not mixed his blue-tail fly with whisky no serious results would have followed.

WALKING matches all over the country have been the real style; but the "true agony" has been shown in those innumerable matches nightly walked by anxious fathers carrying crying babies. The remedy—Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup. Price 25 cents a bottle.

THE lazy man is invited to go to the bee and by studying the insect's habits learn not to be lazy. The rule is a good one, for if a man examines a bee closely, he'll forget all about being lazy and develop a tremendous capacity for action.

"WILL you please pass the milk, Miss Brown?" asked a young man of a fidgety maid at the supper table. "Do you take me for a waiter sir?" she answered. "Well," he added, "as no one has taken you thus far, and you've waited so very long, I should think you were one."

A CARELSS DIET, a change of water or a cold settling in the Bowels, very often brings on at this season of the year an obstinate Diarrhœa, or some serious affection of the Stomach or bowels, imperiling the life of the patient. If you would treat such complaints in a rational way, try at once Dr. Jayne's Carminative Balsam, a simple but safe remedy in such attacks, and equally effectual in all cases of Cramps, Cholera Morbus, Dysentery and Summer Complaint.

IT may be observed that no attempt is made to hunt up out-of-the-way or unknown places to find endorsement. The Indestructibility of Matter.—This is capable of ready demonstration by preparing a couple of glass tubes of equal weight, each being filled with pure oxygen, and containing a few particles of carbon, free from appreciable amount of ash; that prepard from the fine loaf sugar gives very good results. The tubes are of precisely equal weight, and are hermetically sealed. By heating one of them the charcoal is caused to burn, and ultimately to disappear; the tube and contents, however, is of course found still to balance the other tube (which has not been heated), being of precisely the same weight as it was at first.

Haunted Me.

A Workingman says: "Debt, poverty and suffering haunted me for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did no good. I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well, and none of us have been sick a day since; and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost."—Christian Advocate.

In a recent lecture on the possibility of foretelling earthquakes, Professor Palmier expressed he belief that by means of seismographic stations, telegraphically connected, for registering and reporting prelimary earth tremblings, it would be possible to foretell earthquakes just as tempests are now foretold, and to issue warnings to threatened districts about three days in advance. He did not expect to live to see such asystem in operation, but he hoped and in a measure expected that posterity would be benifited by its universal and permanent establishment.

THE merits of Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup are acknowledged by all who have ever used it for the diseases of infancy. Price only 25 cents a bottle.

In the workshop of the railroad from Moscow to Nijni, the tires of the wheels are not expanded by the direct action of fire, but by hot water, before being put on the wheels. With the assistance of a movable crane they are plunged into a metallic cistern containing the water, which is kept boiling close by. An immersion for some ten minutes is found to expand a tire sufficiently to enable it to pass around the wheel. The heat is found to be more uniform and the contraction more regular than when a tire is heated by fire in the usual way.

There is a talk of constructing a crystal palace in the park of St. Cloud near Paris. The ruins of the old palace would be removed, and on its site would arise a handsome structure surmounted by a costly dome and containing conservatories, gigantic aquarium, museums of science and art, and a theater. Model farms would also be established in the immediate neighborhood, and there would be a pigeon shooting and other pleasure grounds.
